"150+ Screen-Free Activities for Kids will take you back to a time before Minecraft when giggles didn't require an iTunes password. Chock-full of brilliant but simple ideas, this is a must-have for parents."

"The more important an activity is for living and learning, the more senses are involved. 150+ Screen-Free Activities for Kids offers simple, attractive, hands-on experiences that integrate many senses, inviting kids to touch and move, see and hear, smell and taste. All children--especially those with sensory processing issues and other special needs--will joyfully get "in sync" with these fun and functional activities!"

--Carol Kranowitz, bestselling author of The Out-of-Sync Child

"Something I'm seeing more and more frequently these days is a toddler or young child intensely focused on a screen he is holding. I want to gently take it from his hands and say, "Look up, child! Look at the world around you! That's where life is." That's what Asia is doing: a smart, educated mom who understands what her kids really need and does her best to give it to them. Along the way, through her blog and this book, she is inspiring others to do the same."

--Trish Kuffner, bestselling author of The Toddler's Busy Book and The Preschooler's Busy Book

"Technology has certainly come a long way in providing kid-friendly programs that capture the attention of today's children but in order to build lasting knowledge about their world, young children need to use all of their senses. Asia has put together a brilliant book of simple ideas that will not only capture the attention of young children, but will also foster critical developmental skills as they use all of their senses to explore, imagine, and create through real world, meaningful, hands- on experiences."

--Deborah J. Stewart, TeachPreschool.org and Ready for Kindergarten!
