The Meaning of Our Tears: The Lawson Family Murders of Christmas Day 1929 By Trudy J. Smith

This is the enlarged and reworked collectible hard cover book regarding the true story of the Lawson Family Murders of Christmas Day, 1929. Only 5,000 total copies of this book exist in this form. The author originally released a smaller trade paper back version of this book in 1990 as "White Christmas Bloody Christmas." This is a true story: A respected tobacco farmer in NC murdered his wife and children ages 3 months to 17 years and committed suicide leaving the nation wondering what the motive was. Controversy and interest followed this crime much the same as the Lizzie Borden story. Also this book contains information about a little known movement of the criminal John Dillinger on his trip through NC to Florida. This book contains all the photos and information available about this famous true crime case. Original reviews of this book from publication year, 2006 included: "...I am one of your greatests fans, along with every citizen of the Germanton area....everybody talks of the same subject, your book. It was a book you can't put down. Reading it, I was able to retrace a lot of childhood memories... reading the excerpts made the whole thing come alive. I want to thank you and your late father for putting together this document. It will always be a treasure in my library." - John Wagoner "This book is a real page turner.... it was a compelling read." - Dennis Brown "I gave this book to my mother-in-law as a gift to read while she recuperated from her operation, and she really enjoyed it. She has talked about little else since! She has become so interested in the case that she had to have the companion book, A Child in the Midst also." - Carol G., Greensboro, NC "Loved your book! I read your book and found it to be fascinating. I had not heard of the murders before, you did an incredible job writing it...It is such a deep and moving story." - Evelyn Thomas, Author of Alone in the Iris City
