Editorial Review

From Booklist

With scores of reality television shows all based upon the notion that anyone can be a superstar, this handbook for finding that big break and navigating the pitfalls of an important audition feels very timely. And it's no amateurishly written instructional manual, either. Author Michael is a Juilliard graduate, and contributors include Tony Award winners, well-respected acting coaches, and accomplished directors. Self-discovery quizzes introduce the process of working in the music industry and performing arts as one of personal growth rather than a hapless pursuit. Ideas like making the most of individuality, knowing the difference between confidence and conceit, and finding one's unique and genuine talents can be applicable to all aspects of adolescent life. Michael outlines a proactive approach to success, acknowledging that disappointment may be part of the process, but gives readers insight on every available tool they may equip themselves with to increase their chances of breaking into the biz. Grades 4-8. --Erin Anderson
